SIR ALEXANDER FLEMING DIES:

Sir Alexander Fleming, the man who gave penicillin to the world, has passed away at the age of 73. During a life-time devoted to medecine, he received great honours, including a knighthood and the Nobel prize. But the only reward he ever sought was the knowledge that he had given good service to his fellow-men. The millions throughout the world whose lives have been saved by his great discovery will mourn his passing. The benefit he has conferred upon humanity is incalcuable.
