DONALDSON -- Aarseth

The jet-propelled Bluebird II -- built for speed and piloted by British sportsman Donald Campbell -- is ready for a try at the world's water speed record on Lake Mead, near Boulder City, Nevada.

Soon the two-and-a-half ton monster is zooming across the water at better than two hundred miles an hour.

Hoping to better his own mark of two hundred two miles an hour, Campbell starts the final leg of a his two-way record attempt.

The son of the late Sir Malcolm Campbell pushes his craft faster ... faster .. faster -- cracking the water barrier -- the only man to do it and live ... straining to an incredible two hundred and forty miles an hour ...

And completing the course with an average speed of two hundred and sixteen miles an hour -- a new record for Donald Campbell and his Bluebird II!

* With a bevy of bathing beauties to give it a proper send-off, a novel hydro-glider brings a new water sport to Cypress Gardens, Florida.

SPORTS -- 2

Towed behind a motorboat, the glider takes off at twenty five miles an hour and can climb to one hundred feet. The machine weighs only a hundred pounds and can be put together from a do-it-yourself kit for less than eight hundred dollars.

Its perfectly safe -- says its inventor -- for should the tow rope break, the glider will settle down even slower than a parachute.

Best of all, you don't even need a pilot's license!

~~In pro football, the San Francisco Forty-Niners take on the Washington Redskins. In the opening period, San Francisco quarterback Y. A. Tittle uncorks a perfect pass to end Billy Wilson for an apparent touchdown -- but the score is called back because of a Forty-Niner penalty.~~

~~Defensive play dominates the action as Tittle -- fading again to pass -- has the ball jarred loose. Washington's Gene Brito picks up the pigskin and carries to the thirty-three before being pulled down.~~
