FROZEN FRONTIERS --- 1

Baruch-Fitzgerald

Units of the Army's Arctic training expedition fight wind and snow in temperatures as low as sixty-eight below.

This is near Fort Greeley, Alaska, where ten thousand G.I.s are testing their equipment and themselves --- learning to keep going where there are no roads and no landmarks.

Huge Air Force cargo planes parachute four hundred tons of supplies to the ground forces.

This is "Exercise Messhorn," four hundred miles northwest of the Canadian border. Both Air Force and Army have teamed up to crack the tough military problems of mobility, transportation and supply in the white wastelands of America's frozen Arctic frontier.
