THE DUKE IN GAMBIA.

The Duke of Edinburgh journeys by motor boat along the creeks of the River Gambia - in search of crocodiles. These reptiles are the scourge of the mango swamps - so the Duke makes his pleasure-trip a useful one by bagging two of them personally. His secretary gets the third.

When African tribesmen welcome anybody, they believe in doing the job properly. And when the visitor's a royal one, they really go to town. Why, there's even a puppet show!

Not to mention the local skiffle group...

This one doesn't seem to be fitted with an exit.

There's a lot to be said for a grandstand view - otherwise you might miss the floor show!
