

NEWS FLASHES:

In Japan - the only country which has actually experienced the atomic bomb - public opinion is outspoken on the subject of nuclear tests. A Tokyo demonstration shows that recent Russian tests in Siberia, and Britain's plans to explode a H-Bomb in the Pacific, have roused feelings to fever-heat. Police are helpless to stop the marchers, who carry their protests to the British, Russian and U.S. Embassies.

"Stop the tests", the banners demand. And it's significant that the police are less active than they would be if the Japanese Government really disapproved.

Hans Inger, who runs a saw-mill in a mountain village near Ims, is popular with children because of his unusual pets - tame trout. Hans has worked so hard to gain the fishes' confidence, that they'll do tricks for him that would make Isaak Walton turn in his grave.

They've grown so tame, they don't even seem to mind when Hans takes them out of the water to be stroked like a cat.

Did somebody say "cat"?
