

LEGLESS PILOT:

Douglas Badar wasn't our only wartime legless pilot Colin Hodgkinson, seen here signing his autobiography for "Cats-Eyes" Cunningham, also won his way to a fighter squadron, by sheer determination, after losing both his legs. Plastic surgeon Sir Archibald McIndoe, who helped him back to normal lift after his last crash, joins the party to celebrate the publication of "Best Feet Forward". Johnny Johnson and other famous wartime pilots are here - including Laddie Lucas.

Lady McIndoe and Mrs. Hodgkinson look at a picture of a Spitfire - the aircraft in which Colin won the right to fight - simply because whatever the odds, he would not give up.
