

STAY PUT - THAT'S ALL!

On the old Caribou Trail in the heart of British Columbia, cowboys are testing their saddle and stirrup lengths for the big event of their year - the annual stampede (refer to you!). Some of them come from as much as 300 miles away - and when you've travelled that far, you're not going to let any playful bronco beat you - if you can help it.

They breed 'em tough in Canada - both men and horses, women, too, come to that.

When they're tired of horseflesh, they switch over to beef - and if you thought cattle were nice placid creatures, take an eyeful of this.

There's an idea in this for some dairy farmer - why not train your cows to churn their own butter?
