

TONY SAFE HOME.

Tony Stevens was home again. To the little house in Wood Street, Earl Shilton (that's a little place near Leicester) a police car brought him back, fifteen months after he disappeared. Now, sheperded by a policewoman, his mother following, the 12-year-old boy was re-entering the family circle. The long search was over; the terrible anxiety gave way to joy. The little chap himself was over the fence to tell the folks next door all about it. So was his ten year old sister, Linda. It didn't look as if it would take long for Tony to settle-down again, as if nothing had happened.

Art-master Kevin Tracey (nearest camera) was taken to Hinkley to be charged with kidnapping Tony.

It's an incredible story, how Tracey and the boy remained undiscovered on the Continent for fifteen months. 41-year-old Jim Stevens, Tony's father, gave up his job as a milkman, and roved Europe in search of his son. Fortunately Tony's young enough to pick up his home life again without any trouble. It's hard to imagine how relieved the family must be that's it's all ended happily.
