ROLLING HOME: CARAVAN EXHIBITION.

60/98.

Olympia looked like a vast caravan site indoors. A Bluebird model, cut away for good viewing (though Mary doesn't seem to mind being overlooked) is one of the giants among the 200-or-so caravans on show. This is the way to live that hard, healthy outdoor life. Many caravans go in for an awning, to take advantage of the fresh air whenever it's fine. There seems to be something very lacking here - no man about. However, once the work's done (and looking the little girls over) it's an even bet there soon will be.

Well, no luck so far, nothing for it but to call it a day.

Nothing like the simple life, once you've taken out the simplicity.

The Migrant is mainly designed for contractors working overseas, where it's used as a ready-made dwelling. Longest caravan in the show is the Mandringham; 36 feet. What a contrast, the old type Gypsy caravan. In the very super class, the Pathfinder, a flat on wheels. The industry, 70 firms manufacturing 13,000 caravans a year, is on the up and up.
