WHAT A NOISY NIGHT

The Chequers Inn, in the little village with the big name, Churchill, held England's only competition for blowing coaching and hunting horns; an annual event. It's good hunting country hereabouts, and time was when the Chequers heard coaching horns every day. How good to know that there are still men who can blow one.

For the winner there was a bottle of whisky. Bill Davies, of Bourton-on-the-water, can do more things with a huntsman's horn than just blow it.
