ANZACS SETTLE DOWN.

The Diggers are taking to life in the Middle East like ducks to water .... We are privileged to accompany them, by Motor Coach, to their camp; and, we must say, they look happy at the prospect, of settling down to the job ahead. .... Notice how the populace cheer!

Near their destination, the Aussies disembark from the coaches, and set out on foot for the Canvas City, over which the Australian flag proudly flutters. One of their first visitors is Mr. Eden Dominions Secretary. He carries out a very thorough inspection, and displays a lively interest in all he sees and hears.

The nurses are not forgotten. They also have come a long way to do their bit.

Meanwhile, the New Zealanders are settling in. And we see a few of them enjoying the delights of a tour, of the Pyramids and Sphinx. Perhaps a ride on the ungainly camels and mules had something to do with their pleasure - - but I doubt it. However its certainly something to ~~write~~ write home to Mother, Maud or Mary about. It'll sound so learned. (the early Egyptian Dynasties and so on) And the blue pencil Censor might not blue pencil their remarks!
