FRENCH IN ACTION.

There may be serious news from Belgium...

but that doesn't weaken the will of the soldiers of France.

They haven't time to think about the news, they are much too busy in the battle. Germany is throwing gigantic weight into the attack, but she is also suffering gigantic losses. Thousands of prisoners have been taken, among them Nazi Officers, who have been moved immediately to an internment camp in France. Their fighting days are over.

They will no longer be able to order the machine gunning of women and children... the bombing of undefended towns. They seem to have lost most of their Nazi swagger. Now they have time to think, perhaps they feel a little ashamed of the ruthless brutality they have practiced. Maybe deep down in their hearts they're glad to be out of it. Sometimes even French Barbed wire must seem an almost friendly barrier... between them and the horrors of war.
