THE DUCHESS OF KENT WITH THE W.R.N.S.

The Duchess of Kent visits a W.R.N.S. recruiting centre at a big London store, where an exhibition is held.

Mural decorations give the "shop" as its called, both a business like and artistic appearance. But the chief object of this centre is the enlistment of girls for the duties of typists, telephone operators, domestic workers and cooks, and plenty more of each are wanted. Her Royal Highness who is Commandant appears well pleased with the work being done.

Meanwhile His Royal Highness the Duke of Kent makes an informal visit to a Northern Aerodrome on a tour of inspection. Among the personnel of this training school are Polish Airmen who made their escape to this country by air.

A keen airman himself, The Duke shows much interest in the constructional side of the work and, before leaving pays a social call at the invitation of the Officers Mess.
