

THE W.A.A.F'S ARE PROUD TODAY.

With true military bearing, a detachment of the Women's Auxiliary Air Force return from a march, designed to attract recruits, more particularly for special duties such as the interesting work of plotting.

In other words .... tracing on maps enemy aircraft carrying out raids over the British Isles.

The first consideration of the Service is Physical Fitness, and the recruits certainly look as if they enjoy their exercises.

Work in the Women's Auxiliary Air Force will surely improve the physical (and mental) condition of tens of thousands of our girls, before the war is over. Which, of course, is all to the good.

The week's outstanding figure in the force is a girl who gets the Empire Gallantry Medal for rescuing the pilot of a burning plane at the risk of her life!

Assistant Section Officer Daphne Pearson!

So, "Go to it" Girls.
