THE QUEEN VISITS A PRESERVING DEPOT.

The Queen is interested in everything of moment to the house-wife - and in these days that includes all canned goods, particularly fruit. At this rural preserving depot they're busy with the plum crop, and it is going into tins as fast as it can be stripped from the trees. Beat Hitler? Of course we CAN.

Her Majesty displays lively interest in the whole procedure, and appears very pleased indeed when she learns that there should be no shortage of home grown fruit in the coming winter.
