MURDER FROM THE SKIES.

Early in the enemy's intensified air attacks on London, bombs were dropped on the Dockland area. These caused a big fire which, as night fell, illuminated a wide section of London. In consequence Nazi wirmen, without a shadow of doubt, could have picked out other targets of military importance. But, the Royal Air Force and our Ground Defences were inflicting heavy losses on the attacking air armadas, as many as ninety-nine enemy raiders being brought down in one day.

In their rage at these blows at their air might, the Nazis threw off all pretence of confining themselves to military targets, and the following pictures show that bombs have been scattered over London without any distinction of military objectives.

In the East End, much damage has been done to business premises and homes. And the morning after this occurred the German communique said that they "attacked targets of Military importance". Military importance! Look at it!!

In a West London district some houses and a block of flats were struck. "Targets of Military importance" my foot!

A bus was blown over like a kids toy, by a bomb which burst across the road.

A tram too! Is a London tramcar of "Military importance?"

Any war the Hun has ever fought has been aimed chiefly at the civilian - the coward always attacks the weak! A bright thought in the midst of scenes of devastation: What London goes through in the darkness of night, is comparable only to the punishment being meted out by us on the war factories and truly military objectives of our despicable enemy.

Hospitals..... appear to have a particular attraction for the Nazi "Murderers from the sky". A comforting thought that, in this case not one single casualty was sustained. All the inmates were in safety.... thank God!

In the immediate vicinity of St.Paul's Cathedral, the indiscriminate bombing resulted in fires and damage to commercial premises. Forgive me if I say again "Military importance, be hanged".

The King goes among his people to sympathise with them in their trials. He has a word of encouragement for all, including the A.R.P. workers who have worked so magnificently in the cause of humanity.

While Hitler and Goering are battering their heads against the indestructible wall of British Civilisation tenacity and courage, we are proud to present faithful pictures of how, despite the Nazi methods of warfare, Britons will never bend the knee to force. Whatever has happened, or may happen, we shall come through'..... smiling!
