THE KING AND QUEEN IN SCOTLAND.

Great Industrial centres are inspected during Their Majesties visit to Scotland. It's Cheers all the way during the Royal Tour, a reception as warm and spontaneous as anything since the Coronation. At Glasgow's great Ibrox Stadium, an impressive display of Civil Defence Services. The arrival of the King and Queen into the Arena is a signal for a great burst of cheering from the Schoolchildren spectators.

During the course of the visit the King and Queen shake hands and talk with members of Scottish A.R.P. Services. Its a regular tonic to the men and women of the home front.

Scenes like these make you feel grand to be British. Where else in this turbulent world could a ruler move among his people like this. Devoid of any armed escort, the head of the world's greatest Empire is at home wherever he goes.
