MORE AERODROMES FOR R.A.F.

Aerodromes are as important as the planes that use them. To meet the demand, giant mechanical excavators rapidly convert rough undulating country into smooth-surfaced landing grounds. The mammoth BULLDOZER can make a hilly ridge feel as flat as "the morning after".

The power driven scrapers also do the work of scores of men in half the time. In an incredibly short period, tree covered hills and dales become clearings ready for their top dressing. Its then that the gangs of concrete mixers come along with their lovely sloppy mess and lay down the tracks which eventually will harden into aircraft run-ways.

The finished article - a thing of duty and a joy for Air Force.
