THE QUEEN VISITS SALVAGE CENTRES.

Another Royal visit takes place in the borough of Paddington when the Queen sees some of the work being done at Salvage Centres. A Bosche tin hat from the last war may land back in Germany in the shape of a bomb. In six months, salvage in this district alone realised well over three thousand pounds. Waste paper, tins and bottles may not look exactly valuable, but they're worth their weight in ships tonnage. During her tour, Her Majesty expresses her admiration of the work being done by members of the W.V.S. who, to win the war, have declared war on waste.
