

BOON-- BERG FIGHT.

Three thousand boxing fans crowd the London Coliseum and see the big fight between British Light-weight Champion Eric Boon and veteran Kid Berg come to a sticky end in the second round.

Early in the fight, Boon puts Berg down on his knees for the count of one and begins to score points. In the first round Boon hangs most of his punches on Bergs head, but Berg (like a lot of other wartime fighters) can certainly take it. It was when Boon started to change ~~the~~^{to} body blows that things began to happen.

Here comes an incident leading up to the punch which ended the contest. (Looks like the boys are coming to blows). Berg has already appealed against low hitting by Boon, and it seems they're really going to mix it.

Boon has Berg up against the Ropes now and before the bell goes for the end of the second round, Berg is down on the canvas doubled up with pain from a swinging left hander below the belt. Referee Thomas steps in and ~~is~~ disqualifies Boon for hitting low, and Kid Berg is carried out the winner.
