

FOREST OF FLAMES.

New Jersey has its worst fire for years. A vast sea of flames sweeps the forests devouring whole townships in its path. At Marshfield, house after house becomes a huge torch until over two hundred fall to the blaze. Despite all efforts of the fire fighters, the conflagration roars on, menacing a million acres and consuming everything in its path. Only last-minute rescues prevent heavy loss of life. Day and night the firemen fight the flames which turn a hundred-and-twenty square miles into a trail of charred ruins.
