

FREE FRENCH SAILORS IN AUSTRALIA.

All Free French sailors can't be wrong. Wearing the Cross of Lorraine, the emblem of De Gaulle's forces, a number of them come from Tahiti to Sydney on their way to join the Free French Navy. Schnozzle's bagging trouble with a sunburnt nose. But after a spell on the sunny Pacific Island they all have a healthy coat of tan. They're preparing for an inspection by the leader of the Free French movement in Australia, M. Andre Brenac.

General de Gaulle's representative in the Commonwealth, on behalf of their compatriots in Australia, welcomes the men, and assures them that their stay will be made a happy one.

These men are typical of their countrymen who have already accomplished much in the cause of Freedom under their inspiring leader.
