BRITISH TROOPS BACK FROM GREECE.

The aftermath of the magnificent fighting retreat from Greece. Straight from the battles of the Passes; following a series of bitter rear-guard actions, British troops snatch hasty refreshment during the grim evacuation of the Expeditionary Force to Egypt. Their safe arrival at a Mediterranean Port is a glowing tribute to our three services who inflicted many more casualties than they suffered.

The ex-Commander-in-Chief of the Yugoslavian Army, together with a number of his soldiers are among the wounded to be brought ashore. Different assembly points for British and Anzac Troops seem to indicate the dangers of reviving the Larwood bowling argument. To judge by their happy appearance, they have just come back from manoeuvres, rather than surpassing the epic battles of the ancient Greeks. Men like these are the salt of the earth.
