

KING WITH THE PARATROOPS.

His Majesty focuses his attention on the sky as, from a few hundred feet, leap parachutists in a display of what is rapidly becoming a familiar military spectacle. The lessons of Crete are being closely studied as a desperate venture may yet be made in English skies. The training our men receive (both ~~xxx~~ air borne troops and Home Guardsmen) is keenly tempered in the school of practical experience.

Within a few minutes of landing, the men are inspected by the King.

His Majesty shows keen interest in the soldiers and airmen who may one day make more headline news for Britain. This has given birth to a new fighting man; a combination of soldier, airman and ~~saboteur~~.
