BRITAIN'S TANK MIGHT.

The Divisional Commander salutes his King and announces "The Division is ready, Sir". Its the opening phase of an impressive display before His Majesty of one of Britain's completely mechanised armoured divisions.

In magnificent array are tanks, armoured cars, motorised infantry, anti-tank weapons, field artillery, engineers, supply, medical and signal units. The King takes his place in an American built scout-car to travel the gigantic area occupied by the forces. The car moves down the lines during the biggest concentration of armoured land forces ever seen in this country.

Aerial glimpses of the parade afford a momentary indication of the tremendous size of a division. Standing on a dais for the march-past, the King takes the salute as, like enormous living counters on a vast green board, the vehicles swing past in line abreast.

An inspiring indication of the ever-growing strength of Britain's mechanised might.
