NAVY SINKS THREE U. BOATS.

The Battle of the Atlantic continues ....As our convoys pass to and fro, U.Boats lurk in the vast waters preparing to cut our life-lines at every opportunity. In a recent instance it was a case of "The Biter Bit". German planes and U.Boats attacked one of our convoys of over thirty ships...But the Navy as ever, was "on its toes". Before one could say Hell Hitler, the escorting warships closed in around their precious charges and proceeded to teach the Nazis a lesson.

With a ring-side seat on one of our destroyers was an amateur cameraman, who secured short flashes of the U.Boats in the thick of the trouble they asked for. The photographic quality is poor, but they are the real thing.

At this moment the U.131 has taken a jab from a depth charge, while our destroyers are hunting two other U.Boats, the U.434 and 574. They have all been hit, and in these three shots you will see two of them in the last throes before their final dives to the bottom of the sea.

These blobs in the water are survivors from the U.Boats, in the very soup in which they had hoped to see British sailors. So let's not waste sympathy on them. Yes, the Royal Navy can be relied upon to do its job.
