AUSSIES GET TOUGH.

Modelled on similar lines to our own toughening courses for Special Service troops, are these hard-as-nails exercises at an Australian Army School. Rapid-fire work-outs in the ring are a spur to mental and muscular co-ordination. You either think quickly on your feet, or slowly on your back. Now it's an all-in slogging match. This is what the boys call the sissy part.

Guerilla training for unarmed combat turns on along-busting obstacle race which gets tougher as it goes along. Imagine these boys catching the 8.15 when they get back to Civvy Street.

If your ancestry includes the Man of the Flying Trapeze, it helps. The golden rule of unarmed combat is "Get your Man". Now it's really like the good old days of the Summer Sales. In war it's nearly as rough. No kidgleve methods here - it's sock and come again.

Now kiss and make friends, you Guerillas have got some Monkeys to fight.
