LORD WOOLTON SEES FOR HIMSELF.

Lord Woolton's visit to an R.A.F. Station affords an opportunity for the Minister of Food to interest himself in the work of the crew of a Wellington Bomber. Britain's Commander in Chief of the National Larder is shown some of the home grown produce for which this station is responsible. To Lord Woolton, the humble carrot is a veritable storehouse of energy.

Now don't try to kid the Minister that that's a garkin. Lord Woolton has a special word of praise for the WAAFS in the culinary section. If more women would come forward to do this essentially woman's job, all services would be a lot happier.
