

248000

SPRINGBOKS HOME FROM MADAGASCAR

Fighting French Sovereignty is restored in Madagascar with the arrival there of General Gentilhomme. Under the terms of the Anglo-Fighting French agreement, the temporary British Administration ended with his establishment as High Commissioner. One outcome of this is the arrival in Cape Town of South African troops home in the Union after seeing service in the Island. It's a gallily decorated and beflagged city which welcomes them home. Plenty of cheers and hand claps for the Springboks back from a highly successful campaign with a happy ending.

Not easy to control your feelings - even a soldier found it hard.

Spirits as high as Table Mountain are evident in Cape Town today.

Her streets echo the happiness which greets these men of South Africa's fine Army.