The camel can carry a heavy pack, but the last straw breaks the camel's back. I display electric power as it burns away. Especially in wartime the power station in the beast of burden of the nation. Morning hours from eight till one the greatest part of it is working, extra power to warm the machines, extra power to run the canteen, electric power to run trams and trains, electric power to turn out planes, electric power to build the ships and send them rolling down the slips, electric power to make each gun and most of it needed from eight till one. So remember ~~at~~ at home each woman and man should save electricity all they can, between the hours of eight and one, don't get the cooking and ironing done, your vacuum uses electric power, leave it to a later hour. Don't turn on the lights, don't switch on your fire, don't pile the burden any higher. While the camel is carrying it's heaviest pack, yours may be the straw that breaks his back.
