TITLE.:-DIVER IN TROUBLE.

Picture. :- He's going down into the depths, to show us what happens when a deep sea --

--diver meets trouble when on a visit to Davy Jones. He's "all set" and his "lid" is on !

Are you all right ? Good ! The window is closed, and securely screwed into place.

Down the ladder he goes for a little stroll in the murky depths. In this instance he's going down 32 fathoms--

--that's 192 feet.

Sharp jerks on the air pipe indicate that he's in trouble. Naturally, those --

--up above get the "wind up", but they don't lose their heads.

The diver is quickly brought to the surface, where it is obvious that he is distressed. He is assisted into the boat, where it is, at once, decided that he is a candidate for the "Divers' Hospital" as it's called.

This is really a compression chamber. The distressed man is placed within accompanied by an attendant whose job--

--is to take care of him until re-compression is complete.

The door of the chamber is closed tightly, and the air pressure inside --

--regulated, so as to gradually bring the man back to normal air--

--pressure conditions. When this has been accomplished, the diver is released from the chamber. He is now, (as a famous --

--American President once said) "back to normalcy". He doesn't look too bad !
