ROAD OF PROGRESS - - Stone bridge replacing 80 years old wooden structure high above Carnon ravine nearly completed.

-Cornwall-

Picture:- Builders of bridges have always been heralds of progress. Cornwall, that remote picturesque corner of England does a--

--little progressing on her own. She is replacing this old wooden bridge across--

--the Carnon Ravine with a fine new stone structure which you see here. Six hundred and fifty feet--

--long and one hundred feet high, it has nine symmetrical arches and the cost of the lot--

--will be in the region of sixty-five thousand--

--pounds. The world-famous engineer, Brunel, built the old--

--one eighty years ago. He built several and this is the-- --last one remaining to be reconstructed. The new structure--

--will enable faster and heavier trains to travel to the extreme West. It's a-- --long job, and a difficult one ! But it will be in running trim for your Summer holidays.
