BUDGET DAY - - The Chancellor of the Exchequer goes to "The House" to give the most eagerly awaited speech of the year !

-LONDON-

The Right Honourable Sir Neville Chamberlain Chancellor of the Exchequer prepares to 'take himself for a ride'--

--to the House of Commons. His smile is enigmatic, still it's a smile !

Our cameramen tried to find a smiling tax-payer to photograph, but the search took

--too long. Mrs. Chamberlain accompanies the Chancellor on this fateful day. The Chancellor accompanies the little black bag, and John Citizen sings blithely "The Taxes are coming, Hurrah ! Hurrah !" while preparing to pack another trouble in his old--

--kit back. Still, as the Scotsman said "it might have been war !". A penny off the beer brings down the cost of thirst, and we are to be allowed to pay our income tax in two equal portions.

The Chancellor didn't say what we are to use for money.

And now let's all join--

--together in singing "There's a good time coming, be it ever so far away !"
