ONLY ONCE A YEAR.

Picture. :-

The squibs Guy Fawkes tried to fire under the Houses of Parliament--

--fizzled out. Those made in his honour, or exorcism, nowadays are much more reliable. In short, they are--

--not political fireworks, but honest entertainment. Bridgewater gives a brilliant--

--idea of what a Fifth of November celebration ought to be.

Lots of gaiety, and lots of smoke. But there's no smoke without fireworks.

In real life Guy Fawkes was hanged, but to-night he will be burned. It looks--

--a cheerier end, and is warmer for the spectators.

The great feature of the event is a squib contest. The squibber who keeps-- --squibbing the longest gets a prize.

A brilliant evening show ! After which Bridgewater's theme song is--

--"Let's put out the lights and go to sleep."
