NEWS FROM ABROAD.

(c). Picture.:- FRANCE: Paris waked with--
--some apprehension to the dawn of July 14th,--
--the day when, 146--
--years ago, the workers stormed the Bastille, and--
--put an--
--end to the dominance--
--of the aristocrats. The President's Review--
--of Government Forces--
--made possible riotous--
--demonstrators think twice before starting trouble.
With thousands of troops ready--
--for anything, the chance of a--
--nice private fight--
--looked hopeless. So members of the Fiery--
--Cross of Fascism had an uneventful--
--march through the streets, and so did the gents topped-- --with the Red Cap of Revolution. Se--
--instead of the expected sanguinary--
--rows, everybody mixed it peacefully, danced--
--in the streets like friends,--
--and the only fireworks were-- --those in the parks. Visting Irishmen were terribly disappointed.
