

WITH HIS REGIMENT.

DUKE OF GLOUCESTER AT CATTERICK.

---

Picture:-

The Duke of Gloucester inspects the 2nd Battalion The Gloucester Regiment. His Royal Highness is the Regiment's

Colonel-in-Chief, and this is probably his last engagement of the kind before he implements another engagement of a more lasting nature - at Westminster Abbey.

The Gloucesters are the only Regiment which has badges on back and front of their caps. While engaged against the French at Aboukir, the rear rank faced about and repelled a surprise attack by French Cavalry, and the extra badge commemorates that manoeuvre. The Duke does the Camp very thoroughly. Here he is inspecting the Musketry Drill Section. On his tour he is accompanied by

Brigadier-General Pagen, Colonel, and Lieutenant-Colonel

Gox, the Officer Commanding the Battalion. Gas mask drill by "G" Company is a demonstration of the efficient precautions being taken against fatalities by this diabolic form of scientific devilry. The Duke was much impressed by the smartness and brightness of the Battalion.

He should be. Their nick name is "Brass before and Brass behind."
