R.A.F. CIVIL FLYING
SCHOOL

INAUGURATED NEAR LEICESTER.

Picture.:-

A new Civil Flying School

comes into being. Desford, Leicestershire, takes the honours this time, with Lord Swinton, Secretary of State for Air, coming by 'plane to formally open the establishment. The venture which has received the State recognition, and a flag of its own, has cost sixty-thousand pounds to build. Lord Swinton chatted with a number of the instructors and pilots, and highly complimented those responsible for the task so efficiently accomplished. He took a special interest in a new refuelling invention and petrol supply motor.

Then, for a time, Lord Swinton watched pupils receiving instruction. The pilots from this school will be recruited into the Air Force, or drafted into other flying organisations. In fact, they may make a breeze as air traffic 'cops'.
