

SNOW IN CALIFORNIA

RECORD FALL.

Picture :-

In California, where the sun always shines - - nearly always - - the weather report must sometimes read like this. "Last night a slight snowfall of 3-yards gently covered hot springs with a charming blanket of sparkling white.

A heavy fall is expected to-day."

Anyway, new rotary snow-pleughs have to keep boring out roads day and night, in case said roads get completely lost. This first season's fall of 61-inches buried

Soda Springs, in the Californian Sierras. Hundreds of motorists were trapped, and temporarily lost their cars.
Police sleuths got on the trail, and by clever detective methods, they found one here. You leave your car, take the girl into supper, and discover you have got to stay for breakfast. Very embarrassing.

Oh ! Look what they have found under the snow blanket.
