

CHELSEA WEDDING

MISS D. MACLEAN becomes
MRS. V. POMFRET.

Picture.:-

Chelsea Old Church receives a bride who wears a veil which is probably older than the old Church itself. Miss Desires Dawn Maclean, is the fourteenth bride to wear this wonderful heirloom of antique French lace, under which shimmers an attractive robe of satin inter-woven with bright silver threads. From the cowl neckline falls a considerable train of ivory satin which requires rather careful management.

Outside the Church door gather beauty lovers, the hoping, and of course the merely curious. A bride and bridegroom coming out of Church is an attraction which never seems to lose its drawing power. As brides, girls seem to take on an ethereal beauty and Mrs. Pomfret, Miss Maclean that was, is certainly no exception. By the way, the orange blossoms in her bouquet were grown at her childhood home in Natal.

Well, here's wishing them all they wish themselves ! One can't, or daren't wish them more.
