WILD PONIES. 3/8/54.

Wild ponies on this island off the coast of Virginia, U.S.A., are descendants of the horses of Spanish settlers of centuries past. This was a round-up by modern cowboys to bring them to the mainland --- and they had to swim for it. But they're a hardy breed --- and they made the crossing easily. They're were destined for an auction sale --- to be sold as ponies for children.

FOUR DAYS WALK.

More than ten thousand enthusiasts, including a detachment of Women Police from London and a contingent of the Sussex Regiment, took part in what is probably the best-patronised walking tour in the world --- the four-day hike from Nijmegen in Holland --- back to Nijmegen. The soldiers marched approximately twenty-five miles a day; but the civilians could choose their own distance -- as long [redacted].

JULIANA IN DENMARK.

Repaying an earlier visit of the King and Queen of Denmark to Holland, Queen Juliana of the Netherlands took her two daughters for a summer stay in Denmark. They were welcomed at the station by King Frederik and Queen Ingrid and the Danish Princesses --- and taken off for a short holiday at the royal residence in South Jutland. A gay occasion --- with nothing more political about it than the chatter of five young princesses.
