

At King Edward VII Grammar School at King's Lynn, Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth was greeted by the Lord Lieutenant of Norfolk when she went to unveil a plaque commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of the opening of the present building.

Then, accompanied by the Headmaster, Her Majesty made a tour of the ~~best~~ classrooms; and left behind, as a memento of the occasion, a signed portrait of herself.

In one of the Laboratories, the Queen stopped and talked to Colin Smith; and when it came to the presentation of the Gold Medal which Her Majesty gives every year to the school's outstanding pupil ---it was Colin Smith who was receiving it.

Later, the Head Boy, David Fleming, presented a Jewel Box which had been made in the School workshop.
