

COLOMBIA.

This was once the busy centre of Cali, the fourth largest town in Colombia; reduced to this wreckage when seven lorries loaded with dynamite blew up.

Colombia's President, General Rojas-Pinilla, touring the stricken area of this town of South America, in which many hundreds were killed, hinted at the possibility of sabotage, as the cause of this stupendous disaster.

DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.

As always, the Chicago Convention to choose the Democratic Party's candidate to run for President of the United States, was carried on at fever-pitch. And among those who backed Governor Harriman to take the job from President Eisenhower, was ex-President Truman. But this was one time when Happy Harry made the wrong guess; a vast majority gave the victory, to Adlai Stevenson.

SWEDISH GRAND PRIX.

The world's most famous drivers competed in the Swedish Grand Prix at Kristianstad --- but it looked as though some of them were trying to find one of those well-known short cuts.

No. 3 was Maurice Trintignant --- who ran out of road at the dangerous Rabelov Corner. Stirling Moss had to retire, when his Maserati caught fire in the pits.

Once again Trintignant came off the road before the finish, but he went on to win ---and ~~xxxxxxx~~ brought the makers' sportscar world championship to Ferrari.
