

One of the earliest acts by the Queen during her state visit to Denmark was to go to the Memorial to the Men of the Resistance. After laying a wreath, Her Majesty talked to survivors of the gallant Danish Underground ; to those who had never given up their fight for freedom during the German occupation. It's just over twelve years ago that Copenhagen gave its welcome to "Monty" --- and his soldiers of the army of liberation.

In the evening, in the Christianborg Palace, the Queen was escorted by King Frederik at the State Banquet.

~~She wore the ribbon of the Order of the Dannebrog.~~

* On the next day a visit to the celebrated Brewery was stamped on the memory with a pattern in bottles of lager.

And inside the 100-year-old brewery, the royal visitors watched the fascinating processes of bottling.

WHILE THEY WORK THERE,
~~Whilst at the Brewery,~~ the Queen visited the residence of the distinguished Danish scientist, Professor Niels Bohr. Throughout the visit, there was a charming atmosphere of friendly informality.

The Queen's visit was a great occasion for Copenhagen --- not least for the children who brought their friends along too, although some did find it all a bit tiring. But at the Recreation Centre --- they sang a little home-made song called "English Now Do You Do?"

Next came a visit to a modern day nursery for two hundred children

~~of the nursery school performed in front of the~~
And how do you do?

And that night, Her Majesty and Prince Philip were the guests at the theatre for a performance by the Danish Royal Ballet.

Towards the end of the state visit, they drove to King Frederik's hunting lodge in the Deer Park, some nine or ten miles north of the capital. This was a peaceful interlude in the midst of crowded days --- ~~to which the Queen responded with these words.....~~ and the Queen ended her state visit with these words